Physician addiction: A health care crisis

5-6:00 p.m

This webinar was organized by AMA Ambassador Steven Mandel, MD, and the Physician Wellness Committee: Jill Baron, MD, Harris Stratyner, MD, Stuart Gitlow, MD, Paul Earley, MD, Jeffrey Selzer, MD, and Chris Bundy, MD.

Addiction in physicians is an extremely serious problem. It is estimated that up to 15% of physicians will develop a substance use disorder (SUD) during their lifetime. A patient has a significant chance of being treated by a physician who has a SUD (which includes illicit drugs and prescription drugs such as Adderall, cough suppressants, and tranquilizers) — or who suffers from alcoholism. Job stress and comorbidities, especially post–COVID symptoms, have led many to turn to drugs and other substances to alleviate their anxiety.

This program aims to provide education and a safe platform for physicians who may be struggling with substance use and to educate our physician members about the signs and symptoms of substance use and addiction, so they can better identify patients with these conditions.

Registration is required.
