Medical Student National Advocacy Week: How to communicate effectively with Congress

Overview

Join us on Oct. 10 at 6 p.m. Eastern, for a special Medical Student National Advocacy Week presentation featuring two powerhouse speakers.

Learn the best way to communicate legislative priorities with a unified voice from David Lusk, founder of Key Advocacy, and gain insights into the AMA’s legislative efforts and progress from Bryan Hull, JD, MPH, AMA Division of Legislative Counsel.

Presenters

David Lusk

David Lusk, founder of Key Advocacy, has over 20 years of experience in policy and government affairs. The Public Policy and Business Economics graduate of Brown University is an expert in advocate training and grassroots and engagement program development. He has written extensively on policy advocacy and engagement best practices, with his work topping several government affairs...
best-seller lists.

Bryan Hull JD, MPH

Bryan Hull JD, MPH, serves as senior legislative counsel for the American Medical Association (AMA) where he advocates for physicians on Medicare payment issues. He is experienced in leading national campaigns to educate providers on appropriate health care delivery practices and emerging changes to healthcare reimbursement and coding systems. Bryan received his Bachelor’s degree (BS) from Stony Brook University where he majored in Health Science, his Master of Public Health degree (MPH) from Drexel University with a focus on health care management and policy and his Juris Doctor (JD) from the University of Maryland where he concentrated in health law.

When

Oct. 10, 2022, 6 p.m. Eastern

Register

Registration is now open.