AMA Academic Physicians Section (AMA-APS): Orientation and Update
You got questions; we got answers

• What is “AMA governance?”
• What do AMA sections and councils do?
• How does the AMA set policy through the House of Delegates?
• How does the APS affect AMA policy?
• How does the APS represent me?
• How does the APS relate to other AMA bodies?
• How can I apply for leadership opportunities through the AMA?
AMA Governance: Five key pieces

1. House of Delegates
2. Board of Trustees
3. Councils
4. Sections
5. Executive Vice President/Chief Executive Officer

AMA caucuses

• In simplest terms, a caucus is a meeting.

• May be based on practice, specialty, state, or region.

• Goal is reaching consensus on HOD items of business and/or reference committee recommendations.

• Offers a venue for networking and leadership development.
One example: The Academic Medicine Caucus

• Started at A-12, through leadership of AMA-APS

• Opportunity for networking among AMA delegates who are academic physicians and cannot attend APS meeting (which ends prior to HOD opening on Saturday).

• Focus: issues of mutual concern and interest in academic medicine.

• Scheduled for 5 to 6 p.m. on Saturday, June 10, and 9:30 to 10 a.m., Monday, June 12
How it all fits together: the AMA policy-making process

- State and specialty medical societies
- AMA sections (APS, MSS, RFS, YPS, OMSS, IMGS, MAS, IPPS, SPS, WPS, LGBT Advisory Committee)
- Individual delegates
- Military branches

Possible Actions
- Adopt
- Adopt as amended

Join the APS! Open to AMA members through 3 avenues

1: Dean-appointed
AMA members who are appointed by the dean of any U.S. medical school (with an LCME- or AOA-accredited educational program) to represent undergraduate, graduate or continuing medical education at the institution.

2: Self-nominated, faculty appointment
AMA members who hold a faculty appointment of any type at a U.S. medical school (with an LCME- or AOA-accredited educational program)

3: Self-nominated, no faculty appointment
AMA members who do not hold a medical school faculty appointment, but:
- have an active role in UME, GME, or CME
- or serve in a clinical/research capacity in an academic medical center, community hospital, or other health care setting.
Join the APS Governing Council

• Take a leadership role through nomination/election to the Governing Council (GC)

• The GC is the 9-member body that directs the programs and activities of the APS

• Members include chair, chair-elect, past chair, delegate, alternate delegate, three members at large, and the liaison to the Council on Medical Education

• Call for nominations for 2018-2019 is January 2018, with elections in June 2018

• Open positions for 2018-2019 include chair-elect, delegate, alternate delegate, member at large (3 total), and the liaison to the Council on Medical Education
